

2ND SEMESTER SY 2021-2022

PHD ELL COURSE OFFERINGS

ENLL 302: RESEARCH IN LANGUAGE STUDIES: SCHOLARLY METHODS, INTERDISCIPLINARY CONCEPTS AND PROCEDURES

Dr. Maria Luz Elena N. Canilao &
Dr. Marianne Rachel G. Perfecto
Fri, 5:00-8:00pm and Sat, 8:00-11:00am

A course on knowledge production, research/scholarship, and criticism in language and literature study and conjunctions and divergences between two aspects of the discipline; exemplary quandaries and directions of transdisciplinary research within the Philippine/Asian and global contexts; and criticism.

ENLL 303: DESCRIPTION(S) OF ENGLISH

Saturday, 2:00-5:00pm
Dr. Maria Isabel P. Martin

A discussion of the 'linguistics' of English, the 'history' of and the issues related to the 'making' (i.e. development) of the English language – how it has created realities in multilingual environments as well as how multilingual realities have created the English that exists in such environments. These topics are addressed from a critical perspective that assumes language to be a social practice, shaped by broader social and political structures while also being subject to individual users' agency and creativity.

2ND SEMESTER SY 2021-2022

PHD ELL COURSE OFFERINGS

ENLL 315: GRADUATE SEMINAR: LITERATURE AND LANGUAGE TEACHING

Saturday, 8:00-11:00am

Dr. Priscilla Angela T. Cruz

This course explores various theoretical and practical issues related to the language literature teaching continuum - i.e., critical literacy, teacher-text-student interaction, the literature-language interfacing debate, the question of stylistics in the literature discussion, the use of authentic versus simplified texts, the process vs. product approach to literature teaching, pedagogical implications of using a language and/or literature model, canon and counter-canon materials - to provide a framework for course design and curriculum development appropriate to the individual context and objectives of each teaching situation.